I'm looking for a little source material and/or case studies regarding intel officers working in an intelligence gathering capacity at otherwise legal gatherings.

For example: I am being continually asked by Campus Security to provide undercover officers to mingle among protesters legally gathered at the campus. Most recently, I've been asked to support a gathering of motorcycle enthusiasts (ABATE) and the recent "Tea Party." I continually refuse to participate. I understand the need for traditional crowd control strategies but I don't like the idea of using intel officers.

I can sense frustration on the part of my Execs so I need to get them briefed up on the problems associated with such activities. Case studies usually help...know of any?
