

2018 Questionnaire for Prosecuting Attorney Candidates in Washington State
Please send responses to prosecutors@aclu-wa.org by 5:00 p.m. on Tuesday, October 2.

Introduction

The United States leads the world in incarceration rates. We represent 5% of the world's population but house 25% of the people behind bars. Blacks, Latinos, and Native Americans are incarcerated at higher rates than whites; according to data published by the U.S. Census and U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics, Black people are 6 times as likely as white people to be incarcerated in Washington. These data have led to calls for criminal justice reform by a broad and bipartisan range of legislative and law enforcement leaders here and across the nation.

The data have also highlighted the impacts of generations of institutionalized racism on educational and economic opportunities, which are inextricably intertwined with racial disparities in neighborhoods experiencing persistent poverty, higher crime rates, and harsher criminal justice system responses. Public investment strategies have not yet caught up to the identified needs. For example, over the past two decades, research advances in brain development science confirm the critical role of adult mentorship of young people throughout their teens and well into their early 20s—years when the risk of criminal justice system involvement is highest. However, public investment in after-school and evening programs that strengthen bonds among families, schools, and communities has either failed to keep pace or been cut entirely.

Criminal justice policy is set primarily at the state and local levels. Prosecutors wield significant influence with legislators and policymakers who determine what supports will be available to individuals and families to address behavioral health needs and what investments will be made in communities to address poverty and other systemic conditions contributing to the prevalence of crime. Prosecutors also exercise tremendous control over who will come into the criminal justice system, how each case will be resolved, and whether incarceration will be a part of that resolution. The elected Prosecuting Attorneys for Washington's 39 counties set policies and standards that define what success looks like for the deputy prosecuting attorneys who report to them.

Metrics for Success

What metrics do you believe should be used to determine whether the Office of the Prosecuting Attorney is succeeding in its mission and improving the criminal justice system? How would you realign local, state, and federal budget appropriations to support your vision of how we could most effectively accomplish the following:

1. Prevent crime in the first place;
2. Provide crime victims what they need;
3. Hold people accountable for the harms they cause; and
4. Bring recidivism rates down as close as possible to zero?

As prosecutor, I will revisit the county's 2015 misdemeanor consolidation contracts with the cities of Sequim and Port Angeles for which the incumbent took credit. Those contracts placed prosecutorial discretion over all misdemeanor referrals from the cities with the county prosecutor and all costs associated with those referrals with the county. One of the main revenue streams to fund all those costs comes from the county squeezing the poorest among us for the most in fines, fees, and penalties, clogging up the court and jail with debtors in the process. Revisiting those ten-year contracts together with the cities and in terms of the above objectives will be key to moving on beyond how criminal justice has been administered in Clallam County for the last four years, to how it should be administered during the next four years.

Bias

What training, supervision, and review policies and practices would you implement to identify and eliminate explicit and implicit biases in the screening, filing, and prosecution of cases by your office, and to promote equity and inclusion in your workplace?

Not only was the incumbent a defendant in an age and gender discrimination lawsuit that cost the county taxpayers $1.6 million, he is currently a defendant in a sexual harassment lawsuit in which he admits to pursuing his married office manager while in the courthouse and on the job.

One of my main goals as prosecutor is to support and defend (through training, supervision, and review of policies and practices) everyone's right to be treated equally, fairly, and consistently, all as consistent with statutory and constitutional rule of law.

Bail

In Washington, up to 70% of those in our county jails are being held pretrial because they cannot afford bail. Pretrial detention is a leading cause of mass incarceration and racial disparity in Washington's criminal legal system. What specific steps have you taken or will you take, if elected, to reduce or eliminate the imposition of cash bail and reduce the pretrial detention rate in the county jail?

I believe cash bail should be limited to those cases where public safety is at issue.

Disabilities

People with intellectual disabilities have a 4 to 10 times higher risk of becoming victims of crime when compared to those without disabilities. They are also over-represented in the prison population: while they comprise just 2 to 3 percent of the general population, they represent 4 to 10 percent of the prison population, with even greater disparities in juvenile detention facilities and jails. Would you support cross-training and coordination among schools, police departments, victim service providers, and judges and courtroom staff to promote a comprehensive community-based response to situations involving people with intellectual and other developmental disabilities so they can experience equitable justice? If so, how?

As public defender and guardian ad litem, I worked closely with many individuals with intellectual disabilities. As prosecutor, I will institute and strengthen cross-training and coordination to ensure equitable justice.

Drug Policy

Drug arrests have risen in Washington over the last few years – more than 12,000 in 2016. Do you believe that people with substance use disorders should face criminal penalties? Do you believe people who use drugs and do not have substance use disorders should face criminal penalties? What types of charging practices, diversion programs, and treatment programs do you support?

I support pre-arrest diversion and drug court for substance abuse issues. I do believe criminal penalties should accrue to those individuals who (ab)use others for profit in the drug-trade.

Mental Health

According to the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services – “demand for all forms of mental health services far outweighs what is currently available including competency evaluation and restoration services.” What specific steps will you take as prosecutor to keep people with mental illness out of the criminal justice system and to get them into community treatment?

I support pre-arrest diversion, and I will work in conjunction with the judiciary to establish a mental health court.

Of course, therapeutic courts and diversion services come with price tags. One of the reasons I am running for prosecuting attorney is to reduce the price tag associated with the incumbent as a result of his apparent lack of personal boundaries ($1.6 million for age and gender discrimination in addition to the pending sexual harassment lawsuit) and his apparent lack of professional judgment ($300,000 plus attorney's fees for wrongfully seizing private property from landowner Fager and $500,000 plus attorney's fees for wrongfully withholding relevant public records from landowner Lange).

Prostitution

In 2011, King County and the City of Seattle launched Law Enforcement Assisted Diversion (LEAD), the first known pre-arrest diversion program for people arrested for narcotics or prostitution offenses in the United States. In prostitution cases, offering people diversion to services at the first point of police contact, before any formal charges have been filed by a prosecutor, is intended to reduce the harms experienced by individuals who are trafficked or are engaging in the sex trades due to complex economic, mental health, and substance use reasons. What are your thoughts on this approach?

I support such an approach.

Automated Decision Making

Increasingly, judges are turning to risk-assessment tools created by private companies to make bail, sentencing, and supervision decisions. The private vendors do not disclose the calculation formulas and processes that produce the tools' recommendations. Significant evidence suggests the recommendations produced by these tools amplify existing racial biases in our criminal justice system. What recommendations would you make about whether and how the county should use such tools, and how the county should monitor and evaluate their reliability and effectiveness?

Based on my experience as county treasurer, I view automated tools created by private companies for use in the public sector with suspicion. At their best, these tools allow elected officials to disown their decision-making duty. At their worst, these tools allow for results that are contrary to statutory and constitutional rule of law.

Juvenile Justice

In 2018, the Washington Legislature passed SB 6550, which expands the ability of prosecutors to divert most juvenile offenders, including those who have committed felony offenses or who have prior history. If you are elected, how will your office use the expanded authority granted by SB 6550 to implement diversion programs that are responsive to the needs of youth and prevent prosecution and incarceration?

Consistent with my prior work in juvenile court as a public defender, I will work diligently as prosecutor to engage with and partner with community-based programs to expand, improve, and increase options to divert youth from formal processing in juvenile court.

Reentry

The Washington State Institute for Public Policy released a 2017 report detailing the effectiveness of several existing programs in combatting recidivism and aiding reentry. If elected, how will you evaluate and utilize current programs to aid reentering individuals in your community? If elected, how will you and your office consider new and innovative ways to ensure successful reentry?

I will carefully consider all the options as well as any new and innovative ways. It is my goal to review all aspects of the prosecutor's office during the next four years for improvements.

Hate Crimes

According to Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) data compiled by the FBI, hate crimes have been on the rise in the U.S. since 2014. What instructions would you provide deputy prosecuting attorneys and support staff about the investigation, charging, and prosecution of hate crimes by your office? What actions would you take as a public official to discourage hate crimes in your county?

My goal is to support and defend everyone's right to be treated equally, fairly, and consistently, by, among other things, pursuing justice on behalf of the most vulnerable among us. Crimes based on hate are the most insidious of all. I will vigorously prosecute them to the extent authorized under law, such as RCW 9A.36.080.

Immigration

For immigrants, being convicted of a crime can result in double punishment. They may go to jail, but unlike citizens, they may also face the devastating punishment of deportation - even for a simple misdemeanor. These severe consequences happen even if they have a green card, a U.S. citizen spouse and children, or longstanding community ties. In the case of Padilla v. Kentucky, the U.S. Supreme Court made clear that prosecutors have the power to consider immigration consequences when they are making decisions about how to resolve a case, resulting in more just outcomes for everyone. When a conviction can lead to such disproportionate consequences even for a low-level offense, how do you plan to ensure just outcomes for immigrant defendants and their families?

As an immigrant myself, I am sensitive to issues impacting immigrants. As prosecutor, I will carefully consider immigration consequences in ensuring everybody is treated equally, fairly, and consistently.
